PARASITIC DISEASES

It's hard to believe, but parasitic diseases are nearly as widespread as acute viral infections. According to the scientific estimates, about 5 billion people suffer from parasitic diseases. And this number tends to increase.

Here is a simple test. Answer only "yes" or "no":

- Do you eat fresh fruit, berries and vegetables, picked up in the garden?
- Do you like pork barbecue?
- You don't wash hands with hot water before meals?
- You don't wash oranges and tangerines before eating?
- Do you have pets?
- Do you like to swim in ponds, lakes and creeks?

If you have answered "yes" to more than 3 questions, consider checking your body for parasitic infections.

Among the main sources of parasites are raw fruit and vegetables, fast food, half-cooked food or dishes that include raw products, like sushi, sashimi, medium rare meat. Another risk factor are pets.

Among the very first symptoms of a parasitic disease are chronic fatigue, headaches, allergic reactions, skin problems, pains in joints and muscles, sleep disturbances. Once ignored, parasitic diseases can provoke vitamin deficiency, chronic diseases, hormonal changes, and overall weakening of the immune system.
