DIGESTIVE PROBLEMS

Nowadays bowel disorders have taken the lead in the list of the most common health problems. According to the statistics, around 10–15% of the population of economically developed countries suffer from various bowel disorders. Intestinal dysfunction is the most common among them. As a result people often suffer from constipation and metabolic dysbalance.

One of the major causes of constipation is metabolic dysbalance caused by bad nutrition, overeating, genetically modified foods, emotional stress and sedentary lifestyle. Dysbacteriosis also disturbs bowel movement. Food, stuck in the intestine, causes spreading of harmful bacteria, as well as decay and fermentation processes, which leads to the intoxication of the body. Low-carb and high-protein diets and laxative senna-containing medications can also harm bowel movement and provoke metabolic disorders.

Unpleasant feeling of fullness, loss of appetite and headaches are frequent symptoms, signifying intestinal disorders. They often provoke the intoxication of the body and may cause severe digestive diseases.
